The most contentious part of the report dealt with the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, often called SALT-2, approved by the Carter administration in 1979 but never ratified by Congress. President Ronald Reagan has called it a poor agreement, although the Unit-ed States has abided by its terms.

The report said, referring to an earlier treaty signed and ratified itr 1972, and the later unratified document, that "although the SALT process brought certain benefits in the SALT-1 agreements, its final result as embodied in SALT-2 was a clear disappointment to the hopes generated in the early 1970s." Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - U.S. House and Senate budget conferees have neared agreement on a sharp re-duction in President Ronald Reagan's military buildup for next year. But progress came only after a dispute erupted among Republicans over a threat by Mr. Reagan to use vetoes to impose fiscal discipline on Congress.

The conferees appeared close to an accord Wednesday that would give Mr. Reagan about half — per-haps slightly more — of his pro-posed increase for military spending of 10 percent after accounting

The dispute among Republicans flared shortly after the conference on the fiscal 1984 budget opened. Leaders for both groups had indi-cated that they were optimistic about reaching an agreement that could pass both houses.

The conflict was triggered when Representative Ed Bethune, Republican of Arkansas, reflecting the view of many Republican conservatives in the House, suggested that the deliberations might be "irrelevant and a waste of money if the product were unacceptable to Mr. Reagan and he chose instead to veto tax and spending bills that defied his program.

Mr. Bethune was challenged by the Senate Budget Committee chairman, Pete V. Domenici, Republican of New Mexico. Mr. Domenici asserted that the administration shared blame with Con-

Senate Republicans are disturbed by veto threats of a partydrafted supplemental appropriations bill. Sources said attempts were made in meetings at the White House Tuesday to resolve the dispute.

Mr. Reagan's senior advisers had arged a veto on grounds that the measure would spend more than $1 billion beyond what Mr. Reagan wants for domestic programs. Both the $863.5-billion House budget and the $849.7-billion Senate version call for more domestic spending and tax increases and less military spending, than Mr. Reagan wants. But the House departs more from the Reagan script than the Senate.

Education: a Growing Election Issue

By Phil Gailey New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Education is emerging as a major issue in the 1984 presidential campaign and so far the debate is being shaped by President Ronald Reagan and Walter F. Mondale, the Democrat who is expected to win the endorsement of the nation's largest

Mr. Mondale has delivered two major addresses attacking what he calls the "voodoo" education policies of the Reagan administration and hitting hard on Mr. Reagan's pro-posals to reduce federal spending.

organization of teachers.

Mr. Reagan, who moved swiftly to capture what his aides are convinced is the popular view, opened a series of speeches on education Thursday in Minneapolis before a regional forum on the report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

He created that commission and its report brought the issue to the front of the political debate. The commission found a "nsing tide of mediocrity in the nation's schools" and called for tougher academic standards, higher teaching pay, more homework and stricter disciplin

The most critical issue that separates Mr. Reagan from the Democratic field is the commission's recommendation that there be increased spending on education at all levels. The president opposes increasing the federal contribution to education, while all the Dem-ocratic presidential candidates support it. Mr. Mondale has proposed $11 billion in additional federal spending.

The White House strategy is built around a theme that is at the heart of Mr. Reagan's political philosophy: a restoration of old valnes. Other than to propose tuition tax credits and prayer in the public schools, Mr. Reaganhad little to say about education before the commission released its recommendations, but he then moved swiftly to set the terms of the debate while most Democrats were cau-

Mr. Reagan has hammered on the question of merit pay, an issue that appears to have some Democrats on the defensive. Merit pay is opposed by the National Education Association, with 1.7 million members. The group is expected to endorse Mr. Mondale.

"Reagan has got the popular view on education and I'm surprised he latched onto it so soon," said Dr. C. Emily Feistritzer, a former high school math teacher who publishes edu-cation newsletters in Washington. "Any Democrat who opposes merit pay for teachers is going to cut their throats."

The National Education Association has emerged as a powerful force in Democratic politics, especially in the primaries. The association sent the largest bloc of delegates and alternates. 464, to the 1980 Democratic con-

Mr. Mondale and Senator Alan Cranston of California are the only Democratic presi-dential candidates to publicly oppose merit pay. Former Florida Governor Reubin Askew and Senator John Glenn of Ohio view merit pay (avorably, but contend that it must be part of a comprehensive package of initiatives. Senators Gary Hart of Colorado and Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina are keeping their heads down on this issue.

Jim Johnson, one of Mr. Mondale's campaign strategists, predicted that Mr. Reagan is going to gain a temporary political advantage on the education issue, but he added, 'The politics of this is whether you can really convince people you are going to do some-thing about the problem. That's why gim-micks and rhetoric won't work in the long

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said, "I think both sides have a half position on this issue. The Democrats say we need more money, but they're skirting the issue of quality and standards. Reagan, on the other hand, is running around saying a lot of ridiculous things and taking the position that federal money is part of the problem."

Mr. Shanker, who has urged his group's 580,000 members to keep an open mind on ment pay, was among the education leaders who met Wednesday at the White House with Mr. Reagan. The National Education Association was uninvited.

"I don't think Ronald Reagan really views public education as an issue that he wants to deal with on the merits," said Dom Cameron. the National Education Association's new executive director. "He has singled out merit pay because his pollsters are telling him that this is a popular issue,"

U.S. Acid Rain Study Blames Air Pollution

By Dale Russakoff Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration, agreeing with most environmental scientists in its first major research report on acid rain. calls air pollution the prime cause of the problem.

But the report added that there is still not enough evidence to prove that reducing emissions from power plants would halt damage to lakes and streams in the Northeast and Canada.

Acid rain results when pollution mixes with moisture in the atmosphere and comes down in rainfall hundreds of miles away as sulfuricand nitric acid. Scientific studies have linked it to extensive death of fish, and there is evidence that it threatens crops, forest and human The report, which was issued

Wednesday, contributed to anticination about whether the administration will change its policy on acid rain, which has caused diplomatic friction with Canada and political uproar in the Northeast. President Ronald Reagan recently asked the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, William D. Ruckelshaus, to reassess the policy as his No. I priority.

So far, the administration has opposed legislation to combat acid rain, arguing that more research is needed before costly regulations are imposed on coal-burning power plants. While the report continued that cautious tone, its authors said uncertainty alone was no reason for policy-makers to delay action. The 55-page report, which is part of a 10-year study of acid rain by not just the Northeast and Middle West as once thought.

It said that only a "small number of lakes" have been destroyed, aithough in New York's Adirondack Mountains alone. studies show that all fish have died in 180 lakes, it also said evidence of crop and forest damage is shaky, despite studies indicating soybean losses in the Middle West and forest damage in the Northeast and in West Germany

And it said there is not enough data to show how regulating emissions in the Ohio Valley, home of major coal-fired power plants, will curb acid rain elsewhere.

Canadian officials, environmen tal groups and coal industry spokesmen said the report showed little change from the administration's past position.

China Ending Trials for Cultural Revolution By Michael Weisskopf Washington Post Service BELJING - Seven years after the Cultural Revolution ended, China has concluded political trials of the radical zealots who led the bloody campaign, according to the nation's highest judicial officer. The president of the Supreme People's Court, Jiang Hua, said in report to the national parliament that trials in two cities and six provinces had resulted in punishment for allies of Mao's widow who inspired widespread persecutions during the Cultural Revolution from 1966 to 1976.

East-West Glimmers

In Madrid

The East-West conference in Madrid on human rights and European security and cooperation has been going on for so long and, it seems, so inconclusively that most people tuned out a year or two ago. This is a good time to tune back in. The conference may or may not soon produce some final deeds and words of value. It's up to Moscow.

Madrid followed Helsinki, the mid-1970s conference representing a joint Soviet-American effort to spread the benefits of détente in Europe. The inherent difficulties of this project, plus the external shocks to détente as the 1970s went on, took their toll from the moment the Madrid meeting opened in 1980. Yet Ronald Reagan, surprising some skeptics, has kept in mind that the main purpose is not simply to make propaganda but to improve conditions for people, and that for this the maintenance of allied unity is essential. He has had support from Max Kampelman, President Carter's man at Madrid, whom he kept on.

Madrid is a battle for inches, with the West on attack mainly on human rights and the East attempting to set up a defense on the line of "peace." There is no way to compel Moscow to make good, say, on free emigration, or on fair treatment of individuals who try to monitor its earlier human rights pledges, but there is a way to make it pay a price in West-ern opinion. If the Soviet bloc is not really a freer place than it was when the so-called Helsinki process began, continuation of the process at least lets the West keep faith with hose in the East it seeks to aid.

Why does the Soviet Union stay in a forum in which its rights record is perennially at center stage? Setting up such a forum was the price it was willing to pay for formal Western acceptance of the national borders the Red Army drew in Eastern Europe after World War II. Also, the Kremlin wants to pull West Europeans into a new forum to discuss disarmament and other "peace" issues.

In its first phase, the forum under discussion would take up measures to reduce the chance of surprise attack in Europe - advance notice of maneuvers, inspection of troop movements. It would have its uses for Soviet diplomacy. Still, "surprise attack" can only mean Soviet surprise attack. That agenda in-corporates a continuing multilateral focus on a matter of great concern in the West.

Things have gone poorly in Soviet-American affairs in recent years. Many have feared Mr. Reagan was pushing his tactic of hard bargaining to a point of no return both with Moscow and with Europe. At Madrid, none-theless, there are grounds for thinking that an agreement with Moscow is in sight. It would be a Reagan first. And an Andropov first.

In Geneva

Any American president dealing with the Russians must conduct two sets of negotiations simultaneously. This is the reality, sometimes the curse, of diplomacy in a democratic society. The bargaining that must go first, since otherwise there is no foundation for the second, is with his own citizens and allies. The second is with the Kremlin.

On Wednesday President Reagan went a long way toward completing that vital first set of negotiations. He presented the outlines of the altered proposals on limiting intercon-tinental missiles that his negotiators have car-ried back to the START table in Geneva.

"When I established the Scowcroft commis-sion," Mr. Reagan said, "I could not then foresee the impact that this outstanding panel would have." He was referring to the bipartisan presidential group whose balanced rec-ommendations on arms and arms control, as filtered through an attentive Congress, have now become administration policy. For these recommendations, which have provided Mr. Reagan the politician's dream gift of a second chance, too little credit has been given to Brent Scowcroft and his colleagues. They did a terrific job. You could say, of course, that it is easier to give good advice than to take it. Mr. Reagan has taken it, where a more prideful man might have hesitated to make the implicit Confession of earlier error.

The upshot is that Mr. Reagan now has a negotiating position that has been tested and improved in the American political fires. It is an advantage that will not help him so much in the ratifying stage, where he did not stand to need help anyway if he got that far, as in the negotiating stage, where he needs a great deal of help. The support that his new position and, perhaps even more, his newly projected flexibility will bring him should make it harder for the Soviets to go over his head to the American public, as they like to do.

Two broad questions still need to be asked about Mr. Reagan's newly enunciated START position. Would an agreement based on it make the United States more secure? By and large the people knowledgeable about defense believe it would. Is it negotiable? That is, can it be matched to the Soviet Union's own defi-nition of its self-interest? We think it can be. Our distinct impression is that Mr. Reagan is becoming, by political necessity if not by personal choice, a believer in arms control as one essential element in strengthening American security. Gone from his latest statement is his frequent past intimation that arms control was unnecessary, perhaps even a peril. His appeal to the Soviets can be usefully underlined: "To the leaders of the Soviet Union, I urge that this new opportunity not be lost."

Same Hemisphere, New Management

WASHINGTON — Pocket the irony of the ouster of Thomas Enders as the State Department's Latin chief because he is too soft. Cast a beady eye on the explanation from an unidentified White House hatchet man: "You don't handle Central American policies with tea and crumpets on the diplomatic circuit." Not since Joseph McCarthy termed Dean Acheson "this pompous diplomat in striped pants with a phony British accent" has the trade been put down in such colorful fashion. What the comment reveals, of course, is a know-nothing tendency that could yet deepen North American grief in the region, not to speak of Central American grief.

something of a closet liberal — for recommend-ing a two-track talk-and-light strategy in El Sal-vador, for his live-and-let-live line on Nicaragua, for seeking to enlist the likes of Spanish Prime Minister Felipe González as a Central American mediator. In general, for keeping the door open to some sort of political solution. To put a tea-and-crumpets label on his highly conditional readiness to consider negotiation betrays the emptiness of the phrase-maker. If the words mean what they say, a potential way of pulling some U.S. chestnuts out of the Central American fire has been abandoned. Diplomacy is a chancy thing in Central America, especially in El Salvador, but its uses have to be measured against the likely outcome of indef-initely fighting on: not necessarily victory but collapse. Especially is this so in view of the political balance. It is a question whether the U.S. public and Congress will sustain even that level of military action requisite to a serious attempt at negotiation. If it became clear that no such attempt was to be made, support for any mili-tary action at all would almost certainly fade.

In recent weeks the public debate on Central America has taken on something of a different shape. The closer critics of administration policy have come to producing the votes to limit the U.S. role, the more pressure they have come un-der to explain and ensure that they are not givng Marxists undue aid and comfort.

So the critics have been stayed, or at least slowed for a while. But whether the reprieve of the Reagan administration endures depends on what happens on the ground.

Here the fate of the U.S. ambassador in San Salvador is relevant. Deane Hinton is being swept out by the same broom that removes Mr. Enders. Although he has worked for a more vigorous prosecution of the war by the Salvadoran government, one of the things evidently held against him is that he put public pressure on the Salvadoraus to clean up the death squads. Mr. Hinton did this, in any event, until the White House squelched him last December. Up to then, few people not in the grip of the prevailing orthodoxy would have said that the administration was pushing the Salvadorans too hard.

The squelching of Mr. Hinton could only have been taken, as will his replacement now, as a signal of the priority Mr. Reagan attaches to improvement on the human rights front. Salvadorans are provided in signal as one Construction.

dorans can read this signal, as can Congres

Occupied elsewhere, Secretary George Shultz had deferred to Mr. Enders, a strong manager—but too independent, too exposed and, it seems, too tall for the White House. Mr. Enders and Mr. Hinton were the principal conduits by which the bureaucracy fumeled its best judgment to its political superiors. The politicals are under no obligation to act on this judgment. But it is something else for them to indicate it is ideologically imacceptable.

The man replacing Mr. Enders is the eighth assistant secretary in nine years. The man replacing Mr. Hinton has been serving in Africa.

The man who is supposed to be minning negotiations in the region was a senator from Florida.

The practical effect of their elevation is to downgrade Latin savvy at a key level and to leave policy initiative in the hands of the White House national security adviser, William Clark, and United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick. Both are presidential confidents and enthusiasts for hardening the line.

It also means that in the United States, West Germany and Britain there are governments in power that support liberal trade policies, lower taxes and a broad effort to slow the ground of the walks growth of the public sector, even at the cost of higher unemployment and more limited social services.

It is impossible not to find some parallels in the politics of these three closely linked nations.

One of the most striking is the bankruptey of the parties of the laft that until recently provided leaders ship for these three major countries. West Germany's Social Democrats won 38 percent of the vote in March, their lowest figure since 1961. The Labor Party, according to pre-elec-tion polls, may win less than one-third of the vote here, in what could be its worst showing since 1931.

This comes after the Democratic Party in the United States slumped, to 41 percent of the vote in 1980, its.

second-lowest figure since 1928.

Part of the explanation surely lies in the wave of inflation that struct the industrial countries in the 1970s. when OPEC pushed up the price of oil. The governments of limmy Cafeter, James Callaghan and Helman Schmidt were the victims of that in." flation as much as of any shortcomings of their own. Inflation creates anxiety to preserve what a family has already achieved; conservative politicians can appeal to that fear of loss. There was particularly striking evidence of that appeal in a poll taken during the final week of the British election campaign. Voters were asked what they expected would happen if Mrs. Thatcher and the Tories were given another turn in power. Large majorities said the Tonies would not reduce unemployment, would not cut taxes and would not improve living standards. Large majorities said the Tories would cut welfare state services and make the rich richer and-

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Haiti is believed to be on the brink of revolution. According to statements by exiles here who are in correspondence with residents of that island, the battle for the succession to President Nord Alexis has already begun. Another factor which may drive the populace to revolution is that starvation is spreading. Haitian currency has fallen to less than 15 percent of its face value. Persons once well to do have been plunged into poverty. # The New European Painters: II

by John Russell

HE new German painting is primarily metropolitan. It was always so, Before 1914, Dresden, Munich and Berlin were its centers. Today Düsseldorf and the Rhineland are active, but it is Berlin that the energies of the new German painting are concentrated.

West Berlin has areas that the tourist bus rarely penetrates. One of them is called Kreuzberg, a rundown quarter, full of largely derelict industrial and tenement buildings that date from the late 19th century and must have seemed rather forbidding even then. It is also full of Turks. Turks do all the jobs in West Berlin that no Berliner would care to do, and there are more Turks in West Berlin than in any city in Turkey - Ankara and Istanbul ex-

Most of them live in Kreuzberg, where the competition for housing is near zero and reats are not high. So Kreuzberg has street signs in Turkish. It has a street life that is ethnic in the highest degree. You can dress Turkish, eat Turkish, smoke Turkish, drink Turkish, watch ... Turkish movies and hear Turkish tapes.

You can also see a great many artists, who like the low rents, the big ex-industrial spaces and the general immunity from bother and fuss. They even like the Turks, which is more than can be said for most Berliners. Studios there are of many kinds. Sometimes they are high up in a former factory, with a spectacular plunging view across streets overgrown with grass, patches of dead ground unredeemed since 1945, and here and there after nightfall a floodlit arm or elbow of the Wall.

Ari Horst Hödicke, born in 1938 and a Berlin resident since 1959, has a studio of this kind, and there is no doubt that his paintings have been affected by the implausi-bly lurid Berlin light as it streams across the bizarre townscape toward nightfall (One of his paintings is called The Sky Over Schöneberg Has Long Been Silverplated.")

As a teacher, as a colleague and as a shrewd observer of the scene, Hödicke has been a major influence on younger German painters for 20 years and more, and in his present practice be exemplifies not only the determination to paint big and paint free but the trust in instinct that motivates so many of his juniors.

Like most German painters of his generation. Hödicke repudiates the idea that he derives from German Expressionism as it existed before 1914. "I have a much bigger area in which to live," he will say. And it is perfectly true that his work has in it an element of objectivity, a far-ranging curiosity and a readiness to dip into the past. Working on a variant of a methological constitution in the past. German painter Anselm Fenerbach, Hödicke chromatic freedom that have nothing to do with the inner world of the Expressionists. Liberated himself, he has been the cause of liberation in his students, many of whom are now leading figures in the Rhineland and elsewhere. Hödicke set them free to fly. But the unchecked ecstatic movement of the brush rules out certain things, and one of them is the led to the masterpieces of Expressionism.

Hödicke has always been an instinctive painter, for whom it is the most natural thing in the world to stand in front of a canvas and set to work. But there are painters in Berlin who came to painting slowly, and almost reluctantly, and one of them is Dieter Hacker. Much can be learned from the story of Hacker's career. He does not live in a loft-style, ex-industrial part of Berlin, but in a secluded square that might almost be in one of Anthony Trollope's cathedral cities. He lives in a small house with small rooms, and the largest single object in the house is his motorcycle What would normally be the front parlor of his little house has functioned for the last 11 years as an art gallery. It is not, however, a gallery in which conventional works of art are exhibited or sold. It is more of a laboratory in which the nature and function of art are tested in one way or another. Specimen titles of exhi-bitions are "What Is the Point of Painting?" or 'Anyone Can Be an Arust" and "Art Criticism Is a Blunted Knife." Art education, the politics of art, the distribution of art and the semiclandestine activity of the graffitists have all been raked over here. People who pass by the house are welcome to come in.

None of these activities made Hacker look like a predestined painter, and indeed the works of art that he himself made used to be as far from traditional painting as they could pos-sibly be. In 1965, for instance, he made a sculpture called "Mouse Picture," in which white mice scurried in and out of a small-scale labyrinth. He also made a sculpture called "Eating Picture," which the observer was invited to work on by eating chocolate peopermints laid out like pieces in a gigantic game of domi-

Yet the idea of painting as something of primordial importance never quite went away.

"Over and over again," he wrote in 1960, "I am seduced by the idea of making incredibly beautiful pictures." In 1970, he painted that one sentence on a tall black panel and showed it among other verbal manifestos. But not until 1975 did he begin to act upon it as a full-blown painter, rather than as an artist whose every written word was his art.

Even then, there were mysterious obstructions. Landscapes appeared with a huge black cross painted across the canvas, or with a wire fence that stood between us and the scene pertrayed. Written messages coexisted with the paint. It was as if Hacker were too bright, too well-informed and too doubtful of the sense of will launch out with a speed of brush and a what he was doing to surrender to painting completely. But in the last year or two, Hacker has begun to paint pictures that really are on the way to being "incredibly beautiful." As with the other New European Painters, it is the paint that carries the image, but in Hacker's case the image has the quality of a cloud that floats very, very slowly across our field of vi-

Nothing in Hacker's images can be related specifically to Berlin. His paintings have, on the contrary, a rapt inward quality, and only the intelligence behind them has been honed and sharpened by the city in which he lives. Totally different are the paintings of Rainer Fetting, Helmut Middendorf, Markus Lüperiz and the young painter who calls him-

They have in common something that is called "Berliner tempo" — an identification with the big city as a place where things happen fast and where the innocent do not always come out on top. The people in their paintings carry on as if hopped up almost beyond human endurance in an artificial environment where the light of day is rarely seen. If there is music, it blows their ears off. If there are disguises, they will shortly be cast aside in the interests of a closer entanglement. Physical beauty in these paintings is something to be enjoyed as quickly as possible, and that eager-ness is mimicked by the eager and rapid dis-charge of the paint. These are gamblers' paintings, in which all is staked and quite often all is lost.

In Germany before 1914, and again under the Weimar Republic, big cities really had their terrifying side. Not only did they harbor a full-blooded criminality, but authority was characterized by a rampant philistinism. Na-ked feelings, like naked bodies, were taboo. All of this comes out full and strong in the masterpieces of German Expressionism, whether in art, music or theater. We sense immediately that the artist was subject, if not to physical oppression, at any rate to its psychological equivalent.

But in the Federal Republic of Germany, and above all in West Berlin, the artist in the 1980s is not oppressed. The very fact of being an artist counts as a plus, not as a minus. Authority is on his side. Berlin today is a city in which anything can be said and almost anything can be done. The situation of the artist in West Berlin could indeed hardly be better. The Senator for Sciences and Culture, Wilhelm A. Kewenig, is young, adventurous, unprejudiced and open to good new ideas. When the critic and impresar-Christos M. Joachimides went to him with the idea for last winter's "Zeitgeist" exhibition of international contemporary art in Berlin, he came away with the promise of a $600,000 sub-sidy. The enemy of art in West Germany today is not oppression, but boredom.

ONDON — Australian movies didn't come up from down under until the mid-1970s but the Australian film industry began in 1900 when the Salvation Army financed the country's first feature film. Local stars included Louise Lovely. Ronald Colman's brother, Eric, and the exportable Errol Flynn, and those films that were not about the bandit-hero Ned Kelly (most of them were) bore such titles as "Waltzing Matilda," "The Bushwhackers" and "The Wackeroo of Coolaboug."

In 1970 the Australian Film Development Corporation began and government and tax shelter money soon flowed. The picture changed.

Mary Blume

"Australian films before 1970 were too Australian, corny," says Bruce Beresford, one of the country's leading younger directors. "They used to load the films with kangaroos."

Beresford's first feature, "The Adventures of Barry McKenzie" (1972) was very much a local product with such antipodean boff lines as, "I hope all your chooks turn to emus and peck your dunny down." The language barrier was terrific.

The first Australian films to be shown worldwide, starting with Peter Weir's "Picnic at Hanging Rock" (1975), were period films, which led to scholarly articles about the Australian School's preoccupation with the past. There is no Australian School, Beresford says, and the chief reason these films were chosen was to avoid fair dinkum Australian lingo.

"Initially the Americans bought the period films because they're easier to understand. There is no slang, there's less dialogue with cameras endlessly panning across the countryside." Two of Beresford's films are set in the past - "The Getting of Wis-donn" (1977), which he considers his best, and the Boer War drama "Breaker Morant," (1980) with which he hit the international bigtime, receiving about 150 offers, including one to make a "Breaker Morant" He turned down the offers and made two more Australian films, which stirred no international waves. Then, last year, he finally chose his first American film: "Tender Mercies," which played at this year's "Tender Mercies," which stars Robert Duvall and a small cast of unknowns, is set in a dusty Texas town and is a very simple and moving tale of loss and redemption. "A low-key film is hard to make, it's so on the surface actionless," Beresford said. "You have to be sure you're not just staging emotional effects."

Beresford easily ignored advice that his first American film should be something more obviously commercial. Burly and amiable, with a turned-up nose and quiff of hair that sometimes stands straight up, he is not overwhelmed by fame. Australians, he says, don't much like people

"There's a tendency to cut down the poppies, as they say. They don't like people to be too distinctive, they're a homogeneous lot."

On Australian film sets there is little fuss. "They all pitch in, you see actors lifting and pushing. You wouldn't see that in Hollywood, where an actor wouldn't even walk on a wet step."

The effect is of diligent professionalism and of passion and sensitivity concealed behind casual bonhomie. As the sharp-eyed Hollywood director Paul Mazursky once observed of the Australians, "They have this directness and deceptive simplicity. I'm sure they'll be polluted like any country that makes it artistically. I'm sure they'll get some Gucci in Australia, but for the moment they're fine."

Beresford wears a tiny Australian flag on the lapel of his numpled tweed jacket and remains resolutely unguecified. He doesn't have his own production company. He doesn't have an office. He doesn't even have a secretary. "I learned to type," he says.

He lives in Sydney with his wife and three children and flies off periodically to dicker with Hollywood deal-makers. His next film, for an American company, will be a big biblical epic, "King David," starring Richard Gere. "One thing I do like about Hollywood is they're all crazy about movies. In Australia, with a lot of those tax-shelter men

Beresford grew up crazy about film in a Sydney suburb. There was no film school in Australia at the time and not enough money to travel to the University of Southern California and pick up a scholarship, so he went to London in 1961. Unable to join a union, he couldn't find work. He answered an advertisement to go to Nigeria as a film editor but learned little there about film, "Because there was so little going on I became a director for a theatrical company of Nigerian actors. If they needed someone to play a white man or a missionary, I did. It was good because I learned about actors. The funny thing was I made a lot of friends there and we're still in touch."

From Nigeria he returned to London and, still unable to join a union the finally succeeded in 1968), he made experimental films for the British Film Institute. He returned to Australia in 1971 and made "Barry McKenzie," a commercial smash and a critical disaster. A McKenzie sequel and "Don's Party" followed, then came "The Getting of Wisdom," based on a 1910 Australian novel about a girl from an impoverished family who is sent to a stuffy boarding school.

"I enjoyed it the most, it's my best-directed film, I like what it has to say, I like the passion of it," Beresford says. "The wisdom she gets the title is ironic — is to get through by any means. It's the only way to get through this repressive society and she does it with great panache."

He took "Wisdom" to Europe and the United States and returned to Australia with the tins unopened: not one person would look at his film. Then it was shown successfully in Directors' Week at the Cannes Festival. followed at Cannes by the triumphant "Breaker Morant."

Despite the success of Beresford and other Australian directors at Cannes, French critics are in general less enthusiastic than the English and Americans about Australian product.

and Americans about Australian product.

"They are for the most part over-rated," says a respected French critic, Michel Ciment. "They are doing well what Americans films did well in the '50s. They appeal to a nostalgia for '50s films."

Beresford in fact shares French enthusiasm for such highly esthetic films as "Days of Heaven" and "The Draughtsman's Contract." But he is also interested in the strong narrative drive that used to be part of French filmmaking — "Renoir's and Carné's narrative sense — 'Les Enfants du Paradis' is one of the best scripts anyone wrote," he said. A them talking." Walsh did that his whole life — he set the camera up and got them talking." Walsh is a French film hero. "Almost any bad American director is." Beresford says.

His next film, "King David," will be shot mostly in Italy with a script has been proposed finds by the set of lens that Beresford finds by the set.

by Andrew Birkin, brother of Jane, that Berestord finds brilliant.

"The script is so wonderful your heart goes thump, thump," he says. "King David" will not be a biblical epic in the style of Cecil B. "It's an enormous epic but don't think of it in terms of phony backdrops and heavenly choirs because we're knocking ourselves out to be realistic. The clothes will look as if they live in them. In most of those biblical things they look so uncomfortable in their little skirts. The mythic quality should come out of the human story. The boring thing was posing silhouetted against the sky with human relationships simplified to the point of tedium." The only biblical films he has liked were Zeffirelli's "Life of Jesus" and "The Gospel According to Saint Matthew" of Pasolini in which, he says, Christ was played as a blackeyed fanatic with none of the soppy stuff.

Richard Gere is David, says Beresford, because David must be terribly handsome since everyone will think of the Davids of Donatello and Michelangelo. No one, he says, has ever filmed the whole David story

"He wrote the psalms though some were stuck in later, he went off with Bathsheba, his relationship with Saul David and Jonathan — we have to be careful about that, we can't have anything but two very butch guys. They weren't pillow-biters.

"What's wrong with most biblical films is they're too goody goody despite the fact that the Bible is full of 'And then he did the dirty and had it off with his friend's wife.' This - the book that's in everyone's top drawer!"

their eyes glaze over, they just have barbecues on their back lawns. In Beresford feels quite ebullient about the project. "Biblical epics don't Hollywood, no matter what their taste is, they're all crazy about film." have to be awful, "he says. "They just were."

Prime Time Abroad for U.S. TV

by David Crook

OLLYWOOD - For 8 to 10 hours a day, 2 weeks or longer, they sit in darkened screening rooms all over town. They laugh occasionally. They groan sometimes. They scribble notes to selves and to one another. Over there is an Australian television-network executive. A few rows down, a Canadian television programmer sits alone. On the aisle, near the front, two executives from Hong Kong talk in tones so muffled that an eavesdropper cannot tell whether they speak in English or Cantonese. They all have come to buy this city's most famous product - images on screens. In this case, they seek the same television images that the U.S. networks have just chosen for their coming fall schedules.

During the spring, usually beginning the same day that the first of the big three U.S. networks announces its fall schedule, television executives from all over the world rush to Los Angeles. In a month, 200 or more buyers from as near as Mexico and as far as Thailand will have passed through what are known collectively as the Los Angeles Screenings, an in-formal annual ritual of the television world.

At the top of everyone's shopping lists are the one-hour action-adventure shows. These captivate the foreign audience with archetypal American scenes like shootouts and car chases. They are also the shows that, in the eyes of the foreign buyers, have suffered from the U.S. networks' attempts to cut down on violence.
"In the good old days, "T.J. Hooker' would have had blood all over the place," says Gregory Coote, managing director of Australia's Network 10. "Now, there's not enough violence. The shampooing of these series has made them cunuchs."

Earlier in the spring, most of the men and women of this international marketplace were in Cannes, France, for the Marché International des Programmes, a gargantuan sales show that brings together buyers and sellers from around the world. After Cannes, the crowd headed for Los Angeles for the most sought-after prizes - the new American shows, which are the most popular with their

"We come looking for the action, one-hour series," says Ronald Leong, assistant program purchasing manager for HKTV in Hong Kong, "It's got to be very fast-paced."

Interestingly, shows that are only marginally successful — and often outright influres — on U.S. television can have avid followings elsewhere. One of the great disappointments for foreign buyers, for example, was NBC's deci-sion to cancel "Fame," which drew far-larger audiences abroad than at home. Last year, two of the most cagerly sought-after shows were "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and "Tales of the Gold Monkey." neither of which survived the spring cut in the United States.

Just about everyone agrees that situation comedies as a rule do not make it overseas. With the notable exception of "MASH," the sitcoms tend to do very poorly in the international market because they usually involve American situations and characters. Popular American sitcoms generally have failed to at-Continued on page 9W tract big audiences overseas because, in the words of Len Mauger, managing director of

The vast majority of American sitcoms don't travel," Coote agrees. "Sitcoms are so domestic the people just don't understand Nine Network Australia, they are "ethnic comedies" — ethnic here meaning American.

The preponderance of adventure shows on international television schedules and the lack of other types of U.S. programming contribute to a violent image of the United States abroad, observers feel. "It makes it look like a very dangerous place in which to live," Coote says. And there's no balance because the sitcoms don't work." In May, armed with what research and intelligence they have been able to put together regarding the new programs, executives from the home offices head for the screenings. First come the Canadians, followed shortly by other English-speaking countries. Next, the Europeans show up, then the Asians and the Latin

"My dance card for here was booked a solid month ago," Coote says, relaxing at a Beverly Hills hotel, "Of course, the deals aren't done until everyone's home."

And the deals are very big. Exact figures for the foreign-television market are hard to come by, but reliable estimates place the annual sales of U.S. programs to foreign networks in the area of $550 million, more than double the sales five years ago and five times the total revenues of a decade ago.

The rankings change year to year, but the major buying countries include Britain, Canada, Italy, Australia, Germany, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Venezuela and France.

The dependency of all the foreign networks on the U.S. networks is probably the greatest complaint the foreign buyers have. They especially dislike the U.S. networks' tendency to cancel programs quickly, according to Len Manger of Network Nine.

"That's one of our biggest nightmares," he explains. "Ten years ago we could count on 26 episodes, minimum, for a show. Now, it's more like 6. The most sought-after programming internationally inevitably has failed here.

Dean of the Berlin School

by Vicky Elliott

ERLIN — It is just a since Karl Horst Hödicke began to teach painting at the Hochschule für bildende Künste, West Berlin's printing as he said when they cipal art school, because, as he said when they interviewed him for the job, it is very boring to trek back and forth from your studio to your pub and he thought it would be a good idea to have a third stopping-off point.

Just back home after a six-week trip to the United States, where his work is on show in Manhattan at the Annina Nosei Gallery, Hödicke seemed glad to talk about the old days. Then, he says, exaggerating slightly, everyone knew that there was good theater here, pated Impressionism and died in 1905.

Today there is a whole catalog of "Painters in Berlin," recording for the seminal "Zertgeist" exhibition last year the fraternity of artists active here, and Hödicke is mentioned on what seems like every other page. His most visible pupils are the heftige Maler, or violent painters, who went on to found the now-fa-mous Galerie am Moritzplatz in Berlin in 1977: Salomé, Helmnt Middendorf, Bernd

Zimmer. If anyone asks him which of the new painters he thinks he influenced, he answers: "Nearly everybody who uses a brush in Berlin," and swears, with a only hint of his wicked grin, that he does not overestimate.

Evidence, he says, is there in the fact that but no one could put a name to a single Berlin painter besides Adolf von Menzel, who antici-dustrial paint mixed with pigment, with glue for a primer. Then there is the brush with a kink in it, "constructed to paint this sort of radiator." Hodicke adds, waving at one of the contraptions that warms the raw space of his studio apartment against the bitter winter. "I'm not interested in pushing influence," he says, settling into one of the deep leather sofas that are the studio's only furniture besides his canvases and the odd African mask. "I never liked teachers whose influence you could see immediately. Sometimes I'm not too lucky about that," he adds wryly.

A glance at his students' huge canvases in the studios at the dilapidated, ivy-covered Hochschule seem to bear him out. Today, he says, he has his work cut out in breaking down preconceptions, which can be distressingly

On the Track of African Music

by Jason Berry

OME. Togo - It is barely three hours by car - less than one hour by plane - from this balmy capital to the one in neighboring Benin. But. Lome and Cotonou, two old West African ports and trade centers, are years apart.

In the 1970s, the Togolese government built Lomé into a resort that today attracts European visitors and wealthy Nigerians in search of a tranquil weekend. The hotels on the Gulf of Guinea beaches serve French cuisine and sell exotic wooden masks. At night around the swimming pools, drum and dance performances by folk troupes exhaust even the most stoic Western travelers.

Cotonou, in Benin, is a sleepier place. The pace is slower and ironies abound: Marxist panners drape key intersections, but the tourist industry advertises Benin as the birtholace of voodoo. There are few folkloric shows here. Anti-imperialist rhetoric in the 1970s frayed ties with the U.S. Embassy, and the U.S. Cultural Center almost closed shop. Then a sleek new Sheraton was built, and diplomacy prevailed. At a recent UNESCO conference on the African diaspora, a black historian found himself sandwiched between Soviet and American officials, each wanting a copy of his new

Few officials in Togo view Benin's fledgling tourist industry as a serious threat. (Signs saying "Death to Traitors!" don't exactly seduce the jet set.) But when Bernard Dohounzo opens his new 24-track recording studio next year in Cotonou, a lot of people in Lomé will be watching anxiously.

Dohounzo, a pragmatic, carefully spoken man in his 50s, is hardly the portrait of a record industry mogul. His firm, SATEL — the French initials for the African Society of Electronic Techniques - began seven years ago as a modest, two-room affair, selling electronic parts and pressing discs. The complex today includes a modernized pressing plant, a record store and a wing under construction where a state-of-the-art production facility will be housed in 1984.

SATEL may never make big waves in London or New York, but the day Dohoamzo's 24 tracks start rolling, the Studio de la Nouvelle Marche in Lome will face stiff competition. The Lome studio cost the equivalent of $5.2 million and was funded by the government. East Lake, the English acoustical specialists, designed the technical space, and the Minneso-ta Mining and Manufacturing Co. sold the equipment. When the studio opened in 1981, the celebrated singer Miriam Makeba, who lives in Guinea, came to see the facility. Others followed, and artists in Togo started lining up for studio time

"Our raison d'etre was to establish the most advanced studio in West Africa," says Tassane Ouyi, who directs the facility for the government of Togo. "Pop music is taking off all across Africa and each country is making an effort to record its own music, particularly the traditional folklore, since most pop idioms stem from these origins. We wanted a studio to draw artists from Nigeria, the Ivory Coast, Ghana, even Zaire."

But a year and a half into operation, the Lomé studio is having difficulties. The cost of travel discourages groups from the more disdios are being built in several other countries. music. How does that make the government market is staggering.

Street drummers in Lome.

Some equipment arrived late, and early pressings had to be farmed out to SATEL. As the recession deepened, the Ministry of Indus-try, which oversees the studio's budget, could not provide funds quickly enough. Musicians have begun to gramble, and a backlog of projects is waiting for cash.

But the studio itself is immaculate, and. seems destined to make a mark on the emergent popular culture of African music. "There are problems which are bound to happen," Ouyi says, "and they are common to all African countries. Record piracy is a constant threat. Many people can't afford to buy new records, so the stores make tapes on cheap cas-settes: They sell well under the market price for LPs. You can walk into any one of a hundred little stores in Lomé today, buy a cassette and the man in the store will tape songs off seven different records, the individual times you like. You end up paying less than it would cost to buy a complete record. Of course, the quality isn't very good.

"It's necessary for the government to intervene, to forbid this. But in Togo, we have many villages without electricity. If it's forbidtant of the African countries, and smaller stu- teries on the cassette players - can't get the unrecorded. One way or another, the potential look if they stop it? This is quite a problem for all African governments."

Sales of 3,000 are respectable for a West African disc. 20,000 a runaway success. (In the United States and England, 50,000 sales barely cover studio time.) SATEL has sold over 20,000 copies of the LP "Honore Avolonto et l'Orchestre Black Santiago," whose popularity owes much to the identifiable rhythms of the Curiously, tribalism has become a corner-stone of the evolving music industries. Producers, artists, even government departments rec-ognize that ethnic identifications boost sales and strengthen cultural pride. Folklore records are being produced as seriously as pop discs. The market is smaller, but often more predict-

In the short run, Dohounzo's new studio will probably siphon off business from the Lome facility. But as the Togo government scrambles for funds, the outlook seems favorable. Lomé is a city filled with music. Drum cults gather each Sunday and dancers perform into the dusk. The Ewe tribe has a thriving one-dimensional. Many of his students, impressed with the success of the heftig painters whom he taught in the mid-1970s, arrive on his doorstep asking for a large canvas, a lot of paint and a big brush. It was more fun, he seems to say, when nobody had heard of Berlin as an art center, and he and his number and lin as an art center, and he and his pupils and drinking companions brought such tools out of the attic where Minimal and Conceptual art had thrown them.

Meanwhile, Salomé and Middendorf don't need him anymore: Hödicke is the first to admit that his own paintings do not fetch the highest prices paid for that newly marketable commodity, the Berlin canvas. One of his Finnish landscapes was going for 24,000 Deutsche marks (just under $10,000) last week in the Galerie Haas on Niebuhrstrasse, but Salome's work can go for four times that in New York.

Now 44 years old. Hodicke, had exhibited in London and Philadelphia in the 1970s, but it was in the euphoria of 1979 and 1980, when the Moritzplatz artists began to make waves internationally, that things took off for him. "Hödicke became more important because of his students' success," says a young artist whom he taught and who hasn't yet made it.
"He learned from us," says Rainer Fetting, 33, not a student but a friend among the younger not a stiller out a mend among me younger generation of painters.

The return to the canvas would seem to have been a collective decision, raising the the ques-tion, as Fetting puts it: "Why ever should painting be dead? It's as natural as eating."

But it had to come from somewhere, and Hödicke's career does help to explain how.

He started life as a student of Fred Thieler, whom he calls one of the leading exponents of the Informel school of abstractionists. "I went through my Tachist stage, painting blots." There was almost no one painting, except for the statutory few who did flowerpots, but "We didn't think we were conservatives, we thought we were revolutionary.

In the early 1960s, when Berlin began to fill up with interesting people fleeing the draft and the stifling air of their hometowns, Hödicke was one of a few artists in West Germany who did figurative work, as well as explorations on canvas of neon signs that glowed against a night sky or dribbled across reflecting shopfronts.

"The hard times had just ended in Germany, and people were pulling down the wallpaper and painting the walls white. They no longer lived in small rooms with a lot of things on the walls," he says, acknowledging that there were historical reasons for "those boring monochromes" that prevailed at the time.

Berlin was a backwater. "We're so far away." Hödicke says. "It's not on the way to anywhere. Nobody comes here by accident." The isolation, of course, pulled people together. In 1964, he set up the Galcrie Grossgörschen 35 with Markus Lüpertz and eight other artists, pooling studio space and heating bills, "We had to share things. Every-body knew that he needed the others."

He moved on from painting, as he moved on from Grossgörschen to show exclusively at René Block's gallery, but he was still sickened by the slow slide of art toward design and the series of very rational steps that, he argues, had taken the guts out of art. "If modern art was not to be a stillborn child," he says,

Karl Horst Hodicke in his studio.

"something had to be added to it." Art had been diminished, reduced to its practical applications or to fun and entertamment.

Hödicke did his stint with Dadaist objects and short films (there is a memorable one about the life of alligators in the New York sewers), but the experiments palled. As he sees it now, everything was bringing him back to painting. The tar he worked with in 1968 had the viscous texture of paint; the film shorts, with final shots of Gary Cooper backing into the sunset, became the outlines of his 1975 paintings: "Im Gegenlicht" (Against the Light) in which he began to exploit his skill as a colorist again. "It became obvious," he says, that the only material I could work with continually was painting."
By 1974, Hödicke had Salomé, Zimmer and Middendorf at the Hochschule and a style began to emerge. The huge canvases began to turn up in the discotheques; their broad, sum-mary strokes suggesting what one critic has called a "calculated spontaneity." Hödicke isn't sure the label fits, but then he is an cious of the labels of people who do not paint themselves, as he is of dogma and its associa-tions with the literary. It is true he spent part of last weekend wrangling over art and politics-with Günter Grass and other cultural heavyweights at a meeting of the Berlin Akademie der Kunst, but he has no time for those who would reduce art to text, to a kind of religion, "a lot of intellectuals telling the rosary."

This horror of intellectualism he says, is what distinguishes the new Berlin painters from their forenumers in the German Expressionist movement of the 1920s - Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, Erich Heckel and Max Beckmann (whom Hodicke calls his favorite painter). He and his colleagues have none of their bourgeois soul searching, says Hödicke, whose father was an engineer in Bavaria. "We were trained to work for what we wanted When I was young, I denied even having a psyche. A psyche was for those people who could afford to have one."

For him, painting is pre-verbal, and the le-gitimate aim of the artist should be to produce a painting that moves the viewer. There were no sketches for the canvases that appeared at "Zeitgeist." "I don't take the paint from my head to the canvas, I move the paint on the canvas," he says. "I may start with a figure, then it becomes a landscape, and then a siren

He has room for story-telling, for those odd shreds of myth that crop up, for example, in his painting "Medea," which, after a recent visit to Southeast Asia, emerged from one of his early sketches of a severed body and a diffi memory of the story of a mother cutting my her children. He doesn't feel it is his busine to explain it: he deals in images, not politica The painter's task is not to deal in mean says. "What you can tell somebody, you do

What's Doing in Rome: A Guide for the Summer Visitor

by Henry Kamm

OME - Church and state, each in its own way, are making this a special summer for visiting Rome. For Roman Catholics, this is the Holy Year of the Redemption, a jubilee for pilgrimages to the See of St. Peter, a year of special events that make a stay in Rome even more rewarding than in other years. For visi-tors of all faiths or none, the city of Rome is planning a rich program of cultural events of thany kinds, a festival of recent vintage called

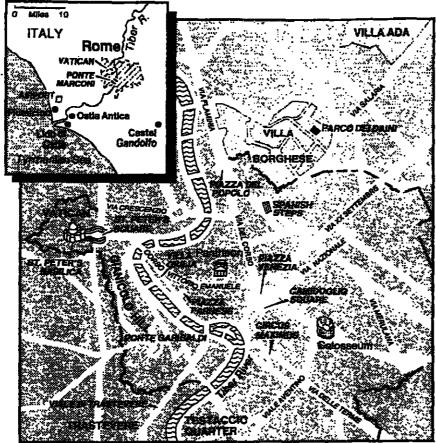

And, without special arrangements on anyone's part, there is the perennial festival of being in a great city aglow in architectural beauty, alive with one of the most energetic and good-natured of urban populations — a feast for all the senses, this season or any Pope John Paul II or a cardinal delegated by him will celebrate a mass in Latin at St. Peter's Basilica every Sunday of the Holy Year and on every feast day at 10 A.M. At the pope's general audiences every Wednesday, which take place at 11 A.M. in St. Peter's Square during the summer, there will be a Lit-urgy of The Word, attendance at which will grant the Jubilee Indulgence of the Holy Year to pilgrims. Tickets for the audience can be obtained each Tuesday at 2 P.M. at the North American College, 30 Via dell'Umiltà, near the Trevi Fountain.

At St. Peter's and the other patriarchal basilicas - St. John Lateran, St. Mary Major and St. Paul Outside the Walls - additional masses will be celebrated every day for the Holy Year. Every Monday, a mass, procession or other rite in Latin will be celebrated in one of the five Roman catacombs. Information in English can be obtained by phoning the Jubilee Year information office, tel: 698-4466.

The pape will celebrate the noontime Angelus every Sunday from his window overlook-ing St. Peter's Square (unless he is at his summer residence at Castel Gandolfo, a pleasant hour's excursion by bus into the hill and wine country south of Rome).

Because of the pageantry and high solemnity of these occasions, visitors not of the Roman Catholic faith have through the centuries been among the most interested observers of the integral part in the life of the city that is played by the Catholic Church.

The Roman Summer festival, an initiative that began in the late 1970s, when the Communist Party ushered in its present reign over city hall, could serve as a metaphor for the spirit of Rome. It is happy-go-lucky, planned only up to a point, popular in spirit, noisy and colorful. The program is not always announced, and events that are announced do not always take place as scheduled, but lots of things do take place, and a good time is had by most. These are some of the things that the city's Cultural Department has in mind for

July and August:
In Villa Ada, a large public park in the northeast of the city, a series of pop music events with dancing is planned. The city plans to celebrate America's Independence Day on July 3 and 4 with country-music concerts, to be followed by a jazz festival.

In the Circus Maximus, where chariot races took place in antiquity, the first 10 days of July will be given over to a nostalgic trip into the Rome of the dolce vita of more recent past. the decade following World War II. Music, movies and other events will recall a period that seems almost classical to the young Romans of today. The American influence will be stressed, and, following that, a two-week

Brazilian extravaganza, with samba-dancing on the streets and concerts of Brazilian folk music in the Circus, is planned. The next event will be a festival of classic movies in the original languages — a major boon in a country where films are always shown dubbed. In the Parco del Daini in the Villa Borghese Park, near the zoo, there will be classical concerts and a festival of Japanese culture.

Churches are to offer concerts of music that is contemporary with the period in which they were built, as one of the city's contributions to the Holy Year festivities.

With programs subject to frequent change, with additions to and subtractions from the schedule, it is advisable to check daily newspa-pers or, for information in English, call the Rome Tourist Office, tel: 474.58.49 or 461.851 (some telephone numbers here are six digits

Trastevere, the popular quarter of old Rome that lies south of the Vatican, offers its annual Festa de Noantri in July. It is a distincily populist feast; Noantri means "we the others," that is, not the powerful of the world but the little people of Rome.

The festival is centered on the Viale di Trastevere, the main street of the quarter, which begins at the Garibaldi Bridge. But the booths that sell food, souvenirs, toys and other stock-in-trade of country fairs also spring up on the side streets. Instead of planned events, the fes-ta offers good fellowship, popular music, com-ic turns and, above all, food and wine.

For the price of a hamburger, a slice of por-hetta, the local specialty of stuffed, spiced suckling pig roasted on a spit, is a great bar-gain. Served with a rosetta, a Roman roll, or a slice or two of crusty bread, it can be taken into one of the many asterie, or wine bars of Trastevere, where the innkeeper will be happy to serve you the dry white wine of Frascati that goes well with porchetta.

An interesting river excursion takes the tra-veler from the Marconi Bridge in the southwest of the city to the shore of the Tyrrhenian Sea to Ostia for a look at the ruins of the town that was the principal port of ancient Rome, in the delta of the Tiber.

The boat's next stop is the seaside village of Fiumicino, which gives its name to the interna-tional airport nearby. The trips are organized by the Amici del Tevere and they will provide a box lunch for 8,000 lire (a bit over $5), about a third the price of the usual restaurant meal The boat sails in spring and summer and the number to call for reservations and lunch orders is 637,02.68. The cost of the trip is 8,000 lire, 6,000 for children, students and the elderly. The boat leaves at 9 A.M. and returns after 5 P.M.

As for where to stay, at the top of the Span-ish Steps — and around the top of the price scale — is the Hassler-Villa Medici, 6 Piazza Trinità dei Monti (tel: 679.26.51) whose roof-garden restaurant commands a splendid view of the city at prices as high as you would expect. A single room goes for 170,000 lire, a double for 243,000. Dinner for two at the restaurant, with a bottle of wine, will cost about 67,000. Somewhat less fashionable and expen-

67,000. Somewhat less fashionable and expensive, but also luxurious, is the Hotel Eden, 49 Via Ludovisi (tel: 474.35.51), where a single room costs 125,000 lire and a double 193,600. In a similar category and very centrally situated is the Hotel d'Inghilterra, 14 Via Bocca di Leone (tel: 672.161), which exudes a pleasantly old-fashioned air. A single costs 110,000 lire, a double 140.900. double 140,900.

Farther down the price scale and conveniently situated for sightseeing near the Pantheon is the Bologna, 4a Via di Santa Chiara (tel: 656.89.51), where a single room costs 51,330 lire and a double 67,300.

Reasonably priced hotels near the Vatican, of particular interest to Holy Year pilgrims, include the Columbus, 33 Via della Conciliazione (tel: 656.48.74) in a Renaissance Palace near St. Peter's Square, where a single costs 58,500 lire and a double 86,000, and the Sant'Anna, 134 Borgo Pio (tel: 654.16.02), where a single or double costs 60,000 lire.

Eating is less of a problem in Rome than in any other European capital. The food is uniformly good, with more peaks of exceptional quality than disappointing dips into the mediocre. The atmosphere is agreeably relaxed, patience with those who are not masters of Italian is unlimited and the house wines. especially the whites, are by and large drink-

Next to the Columbus Hotel is a good restaurant, Pierdonati (tel: 654. 35.57), which has a high percentage of priests among its clients, generally an indication of good food. The pasta dishes are excellent. A meal with the house wine will average 22,500 lire a person. Pier-donati is closed in August and on Tuesdays. Restaurants that are somewhat more expensive include Taverna Giulia, 23 Vicolo dell'Oro

(tel: 656.97.68), a place for specialties from ground pine nuts whose smell hovers delightfully over the comfortable small dining rooms, is recommended. Figure about 30,000 lire a person. Closed all of August and on Sunday.

person. Closed all of August and on Sunday. Slightly higher, and strong in meat dishes, is Girarrosto Toscano. 29 Via Campania (tel: 649.37.59), a place for Florentine steaks and a great variety of sausage and smoked and cured meat appetizers. Closed Wednesday.

Piperno, at 9 Monte de Cenci (tel: 654.06.29), offers such typically Roman specialties as carciofi alla giudea (fried artichokes) and filetti di baccalà con fritto vegetariano (cod filets with fried vegetables). The cost is around 30.000 a person with wine. Closed August, Sunday evenings and Monday.

Sunday evenings and Monday.

In summer, the small Piazza Sforza Cesarini, which from on the Corso Vittorio Ernanuele, near the bridge that leads to the Vatican, is turned into an outdoor restaurant in which the tables put out by two restaurant in which the tables put out by two restaurants and a coffee and ice-cream parlor abut without clear demarcation. The far better of the two restaurants is Polese, at the head of the square (tel: 656-1709). Its pasta dishes are fine, and its salads of puntarella, a Roman green stalk, and its bresaola, air-cured beef similar to the Swiss viande des grisons or Bundnerfleisch, are recom-mended. About 16,000 lire will buy a fullcourse dinner. The ice cream is better at Gino Bella, the place on the corner, however, so move a few tables down for dessert.

Rome has a reputation for being a purse-snatcher's paradise. The reputation is justified and extends beyond purses to cameras, tape-recorders, briefcases, travel bags—anything that is snatchable without removing the owner's clothes or parts of his body.

The first rule is never to carry more than you need when you venture into the street. Note your passport number, perhaps photocopy the key pages, but leave the document, along with everything else you value, in your hotel's safe-deposit boxes.

Shoulder bags are safest for women and should be worn diagonally across the body. It is best not to carry anything on the street side of the sidewalk, because snatchers are often motorized. Cars as well as mopeds and motorcycles do the dirty work, and the scream of victimized tourists, accompanied by tragic or menacing gestures at vehicles quickly fading out of sight, is a common Roman spectacle. Passers-by tend to be sympathetic and the police bored; both are impotent against the summer scourge.

A Restaurant With a Higher Calling

by Paul Hofmann

OME - The elaborate French cuisine has been satisfactory, the Bordeaux was liquid velvet and the din-ner in the deluxe restaurant in a Roman palazzo is nearing its conclusion with demitasse and well-aged cognac. Suddenly the lamps are dimmed, candles are lit and the young African and Asian waitresses, in their flowing native costumes, chant a religious hymn and say a prayer, facing a statue of the The scene is enacted after 10 P.M. every evening but Sunday at L'Eau Vive, the bestknown unit of an international chain that combines French food with religious inspiration. In more than one respect the restaurant is a at lunchtime and at dinner it always has a conspicuous sprinkling of men of the cloth. Some may be prelates who are staying in Rome, others are monsignors from overseas on a visit to the Vatican. Politicians of Italy's church-supported Christian Democratic Party occasionally arrive for a good meal and a confidential

· When Pope John Paul II was still Archbishop of Krakow, he was an occasional guest of L'Eau Vive during his visits to Rome. After his election to the papacy he invited the restaurant's staff to attend a mass he celebrated in his private chapel in the Apostolic Palace.

The unassuming entrance to the restaurant is to the left of the stately doorway of a Renaissance building, the 16th-century Palazzo Lante della Rovere, at 85 Via Monterone. This ancient neighborhood, between the Pantheon and the Piazza Navona, is dotted with churches, religious institutions and tailors who furnish vestments for the clergy.

A sign near the door to L'Eau Vive warns, in French, that press interviews and picture-taking on the premises are prohibited. The notice has been there since November 1981, when the interest of the media was whetted after Le Monde, the Paris newspaper, and Belgian television made public the complaints of a group of young women who said they had once worked in restaurants of the Eau Vive organization. They asserted that they had been underpaid and subjected to stern discipline. "The press wrote a lot of nonsense about us." a Vietnamese waitress told a patron recently.

Many guests at the organization's restaurants believe that the young women who smilingly serve well-prepared dishes and uncork bottles of French wine are nuns who happen to wear the traditional dress of their home countries. Actually, they are members of the Women Missionary Workers of the Immaculate Conception, a secular association that describes itself as a "spiritual family."

Unlike novices in religious orders, the women who join L'Eau Vive take no formal vows; they commit themselves contractually to obthe rules of their community as long as they belong to it. They live together in con-

The Forum, showing the house of the Vestal Virgins.

The association was founded in 1953 by the Reverend Marcel Roussel, a French priest who is now based in Belgium. In addition to the flagship L'Eau Vive in Rome, his association operates restaurants in Belgium, Upper Volta, the Philippines, Argentina and Peru, and in the French overseas territory of New Caledonia in the Pacific.

New members are trained not in commercial restaurants but in special centers run by the community in France and Belgium. The entire staff of the Rome restaurant, including the kitchen help, belongs to the community.

The Rome L Eau Vive, which pays local taxes, has been thriving ever since it was opened in 1965. After the unfavorable publicity in 1981 the church authorities in Belgium and Rome took a look at the association's rules and practices, but apparently found no reason for taking any action.

From a culinary point of view. L'Eau Vive has broadened the Roman panorama. (It has one star in the 1983 Michelin guide.) In a city devoted to rich pasta dishes, the restaurant offers an array of French-type soups, hors d'oeuvres and crêpes. It usually has a good selection of seafood, such French specialties as snails and frogs' legs, and tempting desserts; its cellar is stocked with fine French wines. The ample list ranges over the classic French repertoire - Bordeaux, Burgundies, cham-

The restaurant occupies the first and second floors of the palace. Guests who desire the full treatment are led up a winding staircase to two second-floor dining rooms with old frescoes on their high vaulted ceilings. It is in these rooms that the costumed waitresses sing hymns and pray. The atmosphere is rather formal.

Sample prices on the menu for the secondfloor rooms: quiche Lorraine, 3,000 lire (about 521: trout meumère, 6,000 lire; roast leg of lamb. 8.000 lire; veal with white wine and cepes. 11.500 lire. Each day an "international like chicken Brazilian style with corn, is served.

One recent lunchtime, the meal opened with a satisfying onion soup capped by a delicious crust, followed by shrimps on toast in a delicate sauce for one guest and call sweetbreads for the other, and creme caramel as dessert. With a bottle of 1981 Beaujolais and coffee, the bill for two amounted to 29,000 lire, including service and tax. An additional tip seemed in order.

On the first floor, a three-course "tourist menu." available only at lunch, may consist of a soup or appetizer, roast pork with rice, and cheese or dessert. The price, 7,000 lire withou beverages, is very reasonable for Rome. The tourist menu" is served in two large wainscoted and white-stuccoed rooms to the accompaniment of softly piped in music by Vivaldi and

The dining rooms on both floors are open Monday through Saturday for lunch and din-ner, and it is advisable to make reservations; tel: 654.10.95. American Express cards are accepted. It is understood that the waitresses turn over all tips to their community, and that the restaurant's profits are used for religious

Seeing the Sights With the Sisters

by Ann Duncan

OME — Visiting Rome with the Ladies of Bethany is somewhat like going exploring with two of your favorite aunts: Sister Josefa Koet and Sister Leideke Galema are learned, bright, witty, curious and full of infectious enthusiasm for their adopted

These dapper, multilingual Dutch nuns, who shed their habits years ago, conduct lively, English-language, information-packed tours of Rome and the Vancan City five days a week for a mere 250 lire (about 17 cents) a head.

They also run a moderately priced, nonprofit guest house at their Rome headquarters on the top floor of a palazzo, overlooking one of the city's most beautiful squares, the Piazza Navona. The palazzo had been empty for 200 years until the Ladies of Bethany convinced the building's owner, Princess Doria Pamphili, to restore and modernize it.

There is no proselytizing at either the guest house, which is called Foyer Unitas, or on the and their aim is to help non-Catholic foreigners understand, enjoy and feel at home in this overwhelmingly Roman Catholic city. To make sure that these goals are met, the guest house is open only to non-Catholics and non-Italians. But the tours, some of which require registration a day in advance, are available to all on a first-come, first-served basis.

The purpose isn't and never was to convert people," explains Koet, whose energy and looks belie her 77 years. "It was to open up the city more to non-Catholics and explain the Vatican and church ceremonies. There is much suspicion and ignorance between people of various faiths. We try to take away the misunderstandings."

The two sisters, who conduct alternate tours, spend a half day exploring a single subject, such as the Pantheon or the Catacombs of Priscilla, and delight in correcting misinformation passed on by sloppily researched guide books, interspersing their comments on art, history, architecture, botany and the church with a dose of wry wit.

The nuns also provide tourists increased access to the Vatican. Once a week, they lead a walking tour through the Vatican grounds, and through them, about 25 visitors a week can obtain tickets for the papal audience held each Wednesday. The tickets are for prime seats, just behind the section reserved for diplomats.

The work of the Ladies of Bethany grew out of a Catholic-sponsored special tourist informa-tion service set up in Rome for non-Catholics during the 1950 Holy Year. Money to staff the office ran out after the Holy Year had ended and the office sat empty until Koet and her superior went to Rome in 1952 in search of an ecumenical project.

Instead of waiting passively for tourists to find their way to the bureau, Koet hopped on her Dutch bicycle to make the rounds of the commercial travel agents in Rome and ask them to distribute brochures advertising the Ladies' tours, which were free in those days. "In Holland, the travel agents would have said: 'Are you crazy? You are in competition with us,' " Koet recounts with a chuckle. But only one of the 70 travel agents approached turned down the request, and the public response was immediate. The sisters, she says, then had to scramble to try to keep one step ahead of the demand. "We tried to know a bit more than the people who came on the tours." Four years later, the Ladies of Bethany set up their first guest house. They wanted a place where travelers could meet, talk and, perhaps, learn from each other. "That is the deepest purpose," Koet says about the guest house, "to make a little bit of unity."

However, the sisters' work has now reached a crossroads. Four Ladies of Bethany used to work at the Foyer Unitas, but during the last two years, one sister was recalled to the Netherlands and another, Sister Teresita Loeff, died. Koet and Galema, both of whom are beyond the secular age of retirement, have found their workload increasingly tiring, and no one else in their small order is available to help them. The sisters have been looking for the last few years for another Roman Catholic organization to take over the projects. So far none has been found although talks with a possible successor are It is not that either sister wants to give up her work. "I would never decide to retire unless God

It is not that eather sister wants to give up her work. I would never decide to retire unless don't strikes me down or my superiors call me back." Koet says.

How does she manage to maintain her enthusiasm after all these years?

It is a combination of the people she has met, the ecumenical nature of the work and the sheer beauty of Rome, she replies. "It is by vocation that we do it; it's not a job. You get tired, but you

EW YORK - Two words you must know for travel in Italy: scionero ("strike") and chiuso ("closed"). A few examples gathered from a recent trip will show you what I

But first it should be noted that coping with strikes and unexpected closures rationally and patiently, rather than in anger, can make the difference between a happy trip and sheer trustration.

The prime requirements are patience, perseverance and spare time. Almost everything in that nonetheless magical country is both more complicated and more time-consuming than you might expect, and to plan an Italian trip without ample leeway - say, half a day extra for every day on the original itinerary is to court disappointment. As for the extra-hours: There is always an outdoor cale from which to watch the world go by over a cup of cappuccino or a glass of Campari. Its all part of the charmed mood of che serà, serà that gives Italy so much of its flavor.

Our initiation began early. The plane from New York had just touched down at Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport, when the purser asked passengers bound for Athens and Cairo to get off during refueling. Sciopero. The firemen, who are required to stand by for reasons of safety, were on strike, he explained. Three minutes later, the firemen had returned.

The talk of Rome was the bus drivers' strike. But this sciopero was not something tangible; it was an unpredictable off-again, on-again affair, usually occurring during rush hour. The direct effect for tourists was minimal, except that a great many more commuters used cars.

making the traffic even more chaotic. At the Pantheon, the message was chuiso, specifically, as the sign said. "Closed for technical reasons." (A rare instance of Italian understatement: We learned that a few weeks eariler a substantial piece of the ceiling had fallen off, narrowly missing a tourist.) The message was the same at the Church of San Clemente. near the Colosseum, which architect friends had urned us to visit: chruso for restoration. And the imposing synagogue was not only closed, it was surrounded by policemen with submachine gurs, apparently in the wake of some earlier incident. Visitors were told by a ianitor that they might come for evening services, but mere sightseeing was not possible.

None of this means that there was not plenty to see. The Sistine Chapel is worth several visits of hours each. But you won't be admitted after I P.M. - like many Roman museums, it is chiuse in the afternoon.

Then there was Florence. Eleven o'clock in the morning seemed a perfect time for a leisurely visit to the Uffizi Gallery, except that the huge museum was tightly shut. The grape-vine eventually yielded the information that the museum personnel had just walked out.

Next stop, the Duomo Closed, and sur-rounded by an army of carabinier. Inquiries in brave pidgin Italian with a cop yielded two valuable pieces of information: on strike now, and try again tomorrow, A higher-ranking offi-cer suggested we return at 4 P.M., when the doors indeed proved to be wide open.

The next day we staged a late-morning return visit to the Duomo. Promptly at noon, we were chased out. Chuso for lunch. Later, at about 4:45 P.M., we tried our luck in the 16thcentury Boboli Gardens, Chiuso at 5 P.M., said the guard. On the following day, we were allowed to stroll in the gardens until well after 6.

without a sign of closing even then. Venice: Among sights closed for repair: the Ca d'Oro, the Peggy Guggenheim Museum.

Just plain closed: the Fenice Theater. When a theater is closed in Italy, even if a performance is scheduled for the following evening, it is shut tight. No box office. No janitor. No bell.

And it wasn't just buildings that were shut. You might think that it is hard to close a painting. But one of the masterpieces in the Accademia Galleries, Paolo Veronese's "The Feast in the House of Levi," which covers an entire wall, was, in turn, covered from ceiling to floor by a burlap curtain, to hide the fact than an artist was hard at work restoring it. We know because we peeked through a tiny hole, to be greeted, or reprimanded, by a handlettered sign, chiuso.

Curiosity paid again on our last evening in Milan. We had rushed to La Scala only to find it closed. A careful reconnaissance eventually led to a stage entrance and an official who at first barred the doors. A ballet rehearsal was in progress and there was simply no way to get a look at the world's most famous opera house.

Could we come back tomorrow? Tomorrow we would be in New York. We produced everything short of tears. Well, perhaps if we could come back after dinner. We did and were given a private tour, including backstage.

Having been welcomed to Italy by the airport firemen's almost strike, we were treated to a similar farewell. On the day before our departure, the newspapers reported that a 12hour strike by Rome's airport administrators and air controllers was set for the following day and that air travel throughout Italy would be affected. Nobody in Milan, our point of departure, knew about the stoppage. We left Italy on schedule, eager to return soon to catch up with the places that had been chiuso this time around.

U.S. Gasoline Stations Gear Up For Instant Payment by Machine

NEW YORK — The American service station, after a decade of swift, disjointing changes that have made "full service" an increasingly scarce attribute, is about to undergo its own form of electronics revolution. Beginning next year, most analysts predict, a growing number of but continuing investor concern motorists will not only be pumping their own gasoline, but also paying about interest rates and monetary

Automated fuel systems, as the terminals are called, are based on technology similar to that used in the automatic teller machines at banks. The new systems would allow customers to insert credit cards, bank debit cards or even cash into machines to pay for gas. Such customer-operated ed up 3.50 a gasoline machines have been anticipated for a long time as part of a for the day. broad trend toward the automation of checkout counters in grocery stores, department stores and other retail outlets.

Now several major oil companies are conducting market tests of the terminals and more than a dozen electronics companies are offering different systems. Industry experts expect that the systems will have a huge impact on the service station industry during the next 18 "Next year looks like it will no interest in accepting only one bring explosive growth" in the installation of new automated fuel systems, said Warren Young, Gulf type of plastic; they Oil's general manager for marketwant them all.'

But while oil industry officials say that the trend toward automated fuel systems is mevitable, they are faced with hard decisions about which system to purchase. At the same time, large electronic networks that would link the gas station terminals with oil company credit departments and banks will have to be developed to support the emerging technology.

For oil companies and service station operators, the appeal of the automated fuel system is economic. It is designed to replace a system of accounting for credit card transactions that, despite the size and technical expertise of the oil industry, remains one of the most antiquated in

Costly Procedures

Current procedures require service station operators to mail their credit vouchers to oil companies or give them periodically to gasoline delivery men, who take them to regional billing offices. Because of these slow procedures, oil companies lose millions of dollars in the delayed payment of bills. The automated systems, linked via telephone lines to central billing offices, would speed the process radically.

But the appeal of the systems goes further. It customers used debit cards similar to those used in automatic teller machines, for example, payment would be instantaneous. And some systems have been designed to accept cash and give change.

Shell Oil, Atlantic Richfield and Gulf have taken a lead in conducting market tests of the new systems. Their differing approaches to the technology reflect the broad questions facing other oil companies.

Shell plans to begin a 90-day market test at several Houston stations this summer. The terminals being used will only accept the company's credit cards, but J.J. Gleeson, project manager for retail sales at Shell, said the systems "could be expanded to accept debit cards." "We know that our credit card base is a highly valued asset we want to serve," he said, adding that the "jury is still out on whether debit cards would be of value" to Shell.

Arco is testing four automated fuel systems that accept only cash. The tests, begun last November, have shown "very positive signs of customer acceptance," said Richard C. Spake, the company's manager of selfservice development.

Lower Costs

Arco, which discontinued its credit card-services a year ago to cut costs, added that it plans to conduct a test of machines that would accept debit cards. But Mr. Spake said that by installing only terminals that deal in cash, the company may be able to "keep its costs down and pass through those savings" in lower gasoline prices.

But Galf also said it would begin tests this year of systems that accept debit cards. "There are 90 million ATMs in circulation out there, and from a marketing point of view, that looks like a plum," Mr. Young said, referring to automatic teller machine cards.

Many industry experts believe that the automated fuel systems that ultimately dominate the market will be capable of accepting credit cards, debit cards and cash. "Most merchants have no interest whatsoever in accepting only one type of plastic; they want them all," said Gil Davenport, senior vice president of the Instant Teller ATM Network, a service of the City National Bank of Los Angeles.

Mr. Davenport's company announced an agreement last week with Diebold, a major manufacturer of automatic teller machines and automated fuel systems, to provide data processing services that would link Diebold gas station reminals in six Western states.

If the automated fuel systems gain common use around the country, he said, data processing networks like Instant Teller "will have to grow enormously, and he promulgated in several regions where they do not

Chicago Traders Taking Lessons In Giving Vocal Cords a Future

By Mark Sullivan

CHICAGO - Traders on Chicago's Mercantile Exchange, tired of shouting for a living and suffering in silence, have decided to seek help.

They are attending classes to learn the right way to ell and are being treated by medical specialists for throat damage.

From seaside fish markets to sophisticated financial futures exchanges in world capitals, the traditional method of doing business through shouted bids is known as "open outcry."

Chicago's exchanges typically are a din of upraised voices and a sea of waving arms as traders crowd the floor buying and selling wheat, plywood, the pork-bellies that become bacon and a long list of other commodities and financial paper.

John Roberts (he and others interviewed asked that their real names not be used) was one trader who decided to seek help earlier this year. He enrolled in a speech therapy program at Northwestern University run by Hilda Fisher, internationally known for her speech work.

U.S. to Probe TV Set Imports

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - The U.S. International Trade Commis-sion voted 3-0 Thursday to investigate charges that color television sets from South Korea and Taiwan were being sold at less than the cost of production in the United States, making it difficult for domestic manufac turers to compete.
The ITC found there was "reasonable cause" to look into the allegations filed by unions representing U.S. workers in factories manufacturing color televisions and components. South Korea, the leading foreign supplier of color TV sets to the U.S. market, shipped about $108 million worth to the United States last year. Taiwan's shipments were valued at about

CREDIT LYONNAIS

1982 FINANCIAL YEAR

Notwithstanding a considerable increase in operating provisions, due to the aggravation of the world economic crisis and a marked decline in interest rates in France and abroad, Crédit Lyonnais achieved a net profit of Ff 311 million.

IN FRANCE

Marked growth of loans to customers...

Loans to customers, as at end-1982, were nearly 20% above their level at end-1981, while the rise in customers' deposits, although above that for the previous year, reached only 11.7%.

...while observing the requirements of monetary policy.

Due to the very restrictive rules as regards credit ceilings, the expansion achieved in loans, as much to companies as to individuals, was only made possible by retentions of profits, by the issue of bond loans on the domestic market to the amount of Ff 4.5 billion, and by the substantial growth of loans in foreign currencies, whose share of total loans increased from 12.2%

ABROAD

Further increase in branches' business with customers...

Expansion recorded abroad, due in part to the rise in value of the currencies of several countries in which the branches are established, was again more rapid than in France, as much in deposits received (+ 15%) as in loans granted (+ 29.9%). For this reason, the share represented by the branches abroad in total deposits rose to 22.1%, and in total loans to customers to 24.6%.

...and strengthening of the branch network

During the financial year, several subsidiaries and associated banks again extended their operations. As regards only its direct network, Crédit Lyonnais opened two new branches in Miami and Manila, two International Banking Facilities-offshore branches-in New York and Miami, and three Representative Offices in Bombay, Taiwan and Osaka.

LESS FAVOURABLE RESULTS

Notwithstanding highly satisfactory operating profits... Crédit Lyonnais' net banking income rose by more than 21% over that for the 1981 financial year, while the increase in overheads was about 14%. For this reason, operating profits before depreciation and provisions advanced by nearly 40% to Ff 4,81L3 million.

...provisions have risen very considerably...

Nevertheless, due to the persistence of poor economic conditions, operating provisions have had to be increased by nearly 85%, to Ff 3,771 million, to cover, especially, the risk of losses on loans granted to various countries in a very difficult financial situation and—to the extent of Ff 344 million—depreciation of the securities portfolio, the largest provision being due to the difficulties encountered by Crédit Lyonnais' subsidiary in the Netherlands.

...leading to a reduction of net profits.

In total, net profits for the 1982 financial year were Ff 311 million, as against Ff 469 million for the previous year, a reduction of 33.7%. This was due mainly to the contraction of profits made by the branches abroad, whose expansion had been exceptional in the previous year.

In consolidated figures, net profits fell from Ff 1,032 million to Ff 910 million and the balance sheet total reached Ff 651 billion (as compared with Ff 539 billion in 1981).

Reagan Advisers Increasingly Back Volcker

White House Decision Expected Soon Between Fed Chief, Greenspan

By David Hoffman and Caroline Atkinson

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan's closest friend in Congress, Senator Paul Laxalt, Re-publican of Nevada, and top administration economic advisers appear to be being up in support of the reappointment of Federal Reseve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker. But White House officials say the decision on whether to appoint him has not been made.

THE PRICE OF POWER. Kissinger in the Nixon White House.

that have by now been written about the presidency of Richard M. Nixon, one would think there could be little more to arrest our attention - that only the most spectacular of revelations could provoke anything but yawns.
Well, Seymour M. Hersh's "The Price of Power" - an exhaustive study of American foreign policy as it was influenced by National Security Adviser Henry Kissinger during President Nixon's first term in office — does contain its fair share of eye-opening revelations, some of which have already made news, such as its claim that Kissinger gained access to Nixon's inner circle in 1968 by trading on secret knowledge of the Paris peace talks he had acquired as a trusted associate of Lyndon B.

TONSIDERING the many dozens of books

Moreover, the book elaborates to a shocking degree what had previously merely seemed dis-turbing — for instance, that President Nixon not only believed in the "Madman Theory" of intimidating the enemy through recklessness, but also that to implement that theory against the North Vietnamese, he ordered in October 1969 a secret 29-day nuclear alert of the highest state of readiness.

But what is most impressive about "The Price of Power" is its exhaustive detail, its texture of objectivity and, most striking of all, its ultimate thesis. This is a book that doesn't just gossip and tattle, but reconstructs four years of American foreign policy in far greater detail than Nixon did in his own official memoirs, and almost rivals the exhaustiveness of Kissinger's two volumes, "White House Years" and "Years of Upheaval." (Not incidentally, Heavy Commence of the Property of t Hersh draws extensively on both Nixon's and Kissinger's reports, compares them pointedly and details their omissions.)

This is a book that through its factual density avoids the typically hectoring tone of the investigative reporter or ideologue with an ax to grind. Indeed, Hersh manages to sound like historian, and a morally objective one at

All the same, his thesis is crushing - far more damaging to Kissinger, if valid, than all of the book's stories about wiretapping, double-dealing, lying, or airing racial slurs. That thesis, if I may paraphrase it and squeeze it onto the head of a pin, is that Kissinger never ing his own career. The key to doing that was toadying abjectly to Nixon. By doing so he gained control of all the levers to international policy, no matter what manipulating them filas Bar In Charg Lournam night cost the American people.

Everything, according to "The Price of Power" — but everything! — was done for the glo-ry of Henry Kissinger. Hersh concedes him no point of principle: not the peace agreement with the North Vietnamese or the contact with China, not the Middle East shuttle diplomacy, not even the SALT I agreement. The point of it all was power, and the price of that power was that wars were continued unnecessarily and national honor was sacrificed. And most deplorably, Hersh insists, the liberal press never did catch on to the game.

Does "The Price of Power" then succeed in reigniting one's interest in the Nixon years? To a degree. After all, it simply makes sense. In the past, we've only been confused by various incomplete accounts of certain key incidents offered by the period's major figures. But now, assuming that Heash is right, we can begin to understand such things as the Nixon administration's role in the overthrow of Cambodia's Prince Norodom Sihanouk and Chile's Salva-dor Allende Gossens, or Kissinger's precise connection to the secret bombing of Cambo-dia, or his knowledge of the White House "plumbers," or the real story behind the break-down of his deal with the North Vietnamese nd the Christmas bombing of 1972.

And if it's Watergate trivia one still has an appetite for, one can always confine oneself to Hersh's footnotes, which reveal, among several hundred items, the moral dilemma faced by those who were wiretapping Yeoman Charles E. Radford.

Remember Yeoman Radford, who stole some 5,000 secret documents from the National Security Agency for the Joint Chiefs of Staff? After he was reassigned to Salem, Oregon, a tap on his phone revealed that one of his co-workers was making obscene telephone calls to the wife of a colleague. It was decided not to act on the information, for fear of compromising the wiretaps on Yeoman Radford.

On the other hand, "The Price of Power" is so densely detailed that it must test the tolerance of anyone who has grown even slightly weary of reading about the Nixon administration. Indeed, a conspiracy-theorist would be justified in beginning to wonder if the purpose of the Nixon era wasn't ultimately to distract us from all other presidential administrations.

Besides, "The Price of Power" is depress especially to anyone grown weary with Water-gate. Foreign policy and Henry Kissinger were supposed to be two of the redeeming features of the Nixon administration. At the end of Hersh's study, they lie shartered in pieces. One comes away convinced that it will take more than any book to put them back together

Cliff Johnson, the Blue Jays' designated hitter, drove in two runs with two doubles to lead the Toronto offense against three Oak-land pitchers. Asked if he tried any harder against the A's, who traded him to Toronto last winter for out-fielder Al Woods, Johnson shrugged and said: "I'm not the kind of individual who is vindictive. I think it's very unprofessional to come back and play against your old team and feel vindictive. Of course, the A's embarrassed me by trading me away, and I can't forget that. But I'm in this game to have fun. If baseball can't be fun then you shouldn't be in it. Let's talk about Stieb. Isn't he a helluva pitcher?"

NEW YORK (UPI) — Siew O'Gold, the likely favorite in Saturday's $115,000 Belmont Stakes, Thursday drew post position No.1 in the 15-borse field, the largest in the history of the race.

Slew O' Gold, the handsome bay colt who is a son of former Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, will be ridden by Angel Cordero Jr. Sunny's Halo, who won the Kentucky Derby, was not shipped to Belmont. Deputed Testamony, the victor in the Preakness, was assigned the 14th post position for the 11/2-mile race.

The other nominees, in post-position order, are: 2, Megaturn; 3, Balboa Native; 4, White Birch; 5, Barberstown; 6, El Cubanaso; 7, Caveat; 8, High Honors; 9, Current Hope; 10, Princilian; 11, Dixieland Band; 12, Canadian Factor; 13, Law Talk; 15, Au Point.

Coach Juggling Continues in NBA

CHICAGO (UPI) - The Chicago Bulls announced Thursday that they have signed Kevin Longhery to a three-year contract as the juggling of coaches continued in the National Basketball Association. Loughery coached the Atlanta Hawks last season.

The signing came one day after Stan Albeck, who coached the San Antonio Spurs to a 1983 division championship, was appointed to coach the New Jersey Nets and Jim Lyman, formerly an assistant coach of the Portland Trail Blazers, moved over to the San Diego Clippers.

Lynam, 41, replaces Paul Silas, who was dismissed April 19 after three nonwinning seasons. Other new coaches include Bill Fitch, who switched from Boston to Houston, Chuck Daley at Detroit, Johnny Bach at Golden State, and K.C. Jones, who succeeded Fitch at Boston.

Australian Excels in Queens Tennis

LONDON (AP) — Pat Cash, Australia's highly-rated 18-year-old tennis prospect, downed Craig Wittus of the United States, 6-2, 6-3, Thursday after upsetting Vitas Gerulaitis on Wednesday to gain the quarterfinals of Queens Club tennis tournament.

"I was more nervous today," Cash said Thursday. "I was expected to win this time, whereas against Gerulaitis I had nothing to lose and there was less pressure." Cash will next play Kevin Curren, who beat Wojtek Fibak, 6-3, 6-3.

Korean Surprise in Youth Soccer

MEXICO CITY (UPI) - South Korea upset Australia, 2-1, on Wednesday to gain the quarterfinals of the Second Youth World Cup soccer tournament. Six teams have qualified for the quarterfinals - Unignay, Czechoslovakia, Argentina, South Korea, Poland and Scotland. Brazil and Holland should get the other two berths. Both play their last matches of the first round on Thursday, and need only ties to reach

NHL Counter-Sues Blues' Owners

ST. LOUIS (UPI) - The National Hockey League filed a counter-suit Thursday against the Ralston Purina Co., owners of the St. Louis Blues, seeking more than $78 million in damages and alleging that the company failed to honor the promises it made to the NHL, its clubs and the citizens of St. Louis.

Ralston Purina had previously filed a $20-million U.S. antitrust suit against the NHL because the league's Board of Governors would not approve the sale and transfer of the team to a group in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

OBSERVER Auto Oratory

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — My friend Ralph bought one of the new talking cars. When he took possession, it had new-car smell and said things like, "Buckle your seat belt," "Lock your door" and "Turn on your headlights."

Ralph was so delighted he couldn't resist showing it off to a woman named Ruth.

"It's a miracle." Ruth said. "when you consider that all a baby can say is 'Ma-ma' and 'Da-da.' Ruth began driving out with Ralph every evening. The two of them would drive into the country and get out of the car and then get in again so they could hear the car say, "Buckle your seat belt" and "Lock your door" and "Turn on your headlights."

Then one evening Ruth said she didn't feel like going for a drive. "Don't you want to hear the car talk?" Ralph asked.

"The car is stupid," she said. "It's not learning anything. I'm bored with hearing it tell me to buckle the seat belt

They exchanged tense words, during the course of which Ruth revealed that she was seeing Herb, whose car said. "Check your gas" and "You are exceeding the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit."

Consumed with jealousy about Ruth's willingness to exceed the speed limit with Herb. Ralph moved to save her from fast living. He had read in the papers about a robot that delivered the commencement address at a college in Mary-land. He drove to Maryland.

Several days later, poorer by a large sum of money, he drove to Ruth's house and saw her enter Herb's car. Drawing alongside at a traffic light, Ralph heard Herb's car saying, "Check your gas."

That evening Ralph's phone rang. It was Ruth. "Why don't you a new car of her own, which says."

call me anymore?" she asked. That night they parked under giant elms and heard the car speak of "that blessed birthright which as-sures every American seated under New York Tin these giant elms today the opportu nity to fulfill the human mission without hobbles to the spirit,"

Long after midnight, a shadow approached Ralph's car nestled empty in its garage. It was the shadow of Herb. Its arms flickered over the wiring of Ralph's car. When Ralph and Ruth stepped into the car next evening, it did not greet them with its usual cheery "Buckle your seat belt." Instead it said, "Four score and seven years ago this generation has a rendezvous with destiny, and so I say to you the only thing we have to fear is blood, toil tears and sweat —."

"Nice cars don't say 'sweat,'" said Ruth. "You know I don't like to hear crude talk." "Crudity is all you'll get if you keep driving out with guys like Ralph," said the car. "You mean Ralph isn't a gentle-

"Hah!" snorted the car. "Get him to tell you about that Ilka Poltroon he shoots pool with on Saturday nights."

Ralph recognized the voice of Herb and realized that his car had been turned into a two-way radio during the night.

Ruth was 100 devastated to care. You?" she shouted at Ralph. "You and Ilka Poltroon, the notorious pool-hall trotter? And your car had the nerve to speak to me just last night of the blessed birthright and fulfilling the human mission and the unhobbled spirit."

She disembarked instantly. Ralph drove to Herb's house, saw Herb's car pull away from the curb and came alongside in time to hear it saying, "And so I say to you, youth of America, go forth - go forth in confidence — go forth

The sound so maddened Ralph Then Ralph's car declared, "We that he opened his car door, intent live in a time of great challenge to the youth of America."

Ruth looked across at Ralph, whose car was now saying, "Therefore I urge you, youth of America, the could reach Herb's nose, his diverless machine moved into the division of the could reach the

Cousteau at 73: Full Speed Ahead

His Latest Venture Is a Wind-Powered Boat Without Sails

By Greg MacArthur The Associated Press

DARIS — Although he will be 1 73 on Saturday, Jacques-Yves Cousteau shows no signs of running out of energy while he fights passionately to reduce the amount the rest of us use.

The Oscar-winning filmmaker, undersea explorer and co-inventor of the aqualung flew in from the Amazon basin to promote his powered boat with no sails that uses a 12-horsepower fan to produce the equivalent of 140 horses of conventional diesel power.

The ship reflects Cousteau's lifelong romance with nature and technology, and he uses his international prestige to promote one through use of the other. He is a purist who refuses to sell undersea film footage to commercial producers and who plans to retire his floating laboratory. Calypso, by sinking it in deep water to ensure that it is never sold and "prostituted" by

He received more than a million dollars from the French gov-ernment for his wind-ship project, but unhesitatingly de-scribes the Socialist regime's en-vironmental policy as "terrible." He lunches at the White House. yet openly calls U.S. Secretary of Interior James Watt a "clown.

"French governments, whether they are right or left, try to ap-pear as if they are interested in environmental issues, but they don't give the minister in charge any money or political power," Cousteau said during an interview at his Paris apartment.

The minister is like a puppet.

If he had any guts he would resign. They don't resign because when you become a minister you have a pension for life."

Watt, on the other hand, "is a clown, but a dangerous clown," Cousteau went on. "He's a liability for Reagan. Reagan knows it, and I think he's going to get rid of him before the next elections." Decades of ecological neglect by government and industry has been devastating. Cousteau adds.

Strong national legislation and international cooperation is needed quickly, he believes, and he uses his 160,000-member Cousteau Society in the United States and Canada and the 35,000-member Cousteau Foundation in France to press for both Both conprofit organizations are kept afloat through dues, grants and profits from to save a substantial part of the Cousteau's films, books and leca propeller-driven craft with a 1,500 horsepower engine. He be-lieves the system has immediate commercial applications, and the French government has agreed to outfit several test vessels.

Cousteau, who stays in shape by jogging five miles a day when he isn't on an expedition is already busy editing the film he shot over the last several months along the Amazon River. He is energy we burn." What Cousteau, his engineers and Professor Lucien Malayard, of the French Academy of Sciences, came up with was a proto-type ship called the Moulin a Vent (Windmill) which uses a small fan at the top of a 13.5-meter (44.3-foot) cylinder to divert wind currents and create a depression along the length of the cylinder. The vessel was launched Thursday morning near Mar-

Consteau's experimental boat with a cylinder in place of sails.

A talking robot named Here who dors Duncan." Holm said, recalling sounds like the lovable R2-D2 of that the dancer was killed in a smistand in for his creator and make a home, had programmed it to give his speech as class salmatorian at commencement on June 14. A precedent was set last month when Robot Redford was the commencement speaker at Anne Arundel Community College near Baltimore. The Pulitzer Prize-winning couple's private secretary announced. The couple's second daughter and fourth child was born as mean-spirited in a class day speech to Harvard semiors in Campounds, 7 ounces, (3.37 kilograms), bridge, Massachusetts. "[Vice President] George Bush said he wanted to restore stars to the eyes of third graders," Trudeau said. "It would be nice if George Bush could restore stars to their eyes. It would be much nicer if their schools could restore their lunches." Trudeau also took a verbal shot at President Ronald Reagan, referring to him as

The actor Tony Curtis, in London Thursday on his way to Nice with his fiancee, actress Andria Savio, said they were flying to the French city to get married. We decided to take off from Los Angeles, and get married — just like that. Curtis said. "We are flying to Nice and we have not made any special wood restaurant 18 months ago, for a worldwide tour, said: "We would have got the pilot to marry us if we could have."

The actress Celeste Holm says she barely escaped death when a long scarf she was wearing caught in the wheel of her tan as she and her husband, Wesley Addey, rode to the Tony awards ceremony. "All I could think of, of course, was the sudden and terrible death of Isa-

In Tallahassee, Florida, Christo wore a pink shirt, was honored with a resolution on pink paper and mingled with government officials sporting pink boutonnieres at a ceremony where Governor Bob Graham gave Christo an "Ambas-sador of the Arts" medal to honor a man who gives only $3,000 a year to charities while making half a million dollars a year. "This example of simple mean spiritedness was hardly noticed," Trudeau said.

The actor Tony Curtis, in Longery Trudeau on his way to Nice the Arts" medal to honor the Arts" medal to honor the artist for draping 11 Biscayne Bay, islands in pink. "The Surrounded Islands' project will go down in history as one of the most extraordinary art projects ever developed," said Secretary of State George Firestone. He noted that the two-week project, completed the two-week project, completed May 7, increased Dade County may 7, increased Date Collary tourism by 10 to 20 percent. Christo called "Surrounded Islands" the "most beautiful project I did," but added: "I will never do another Surrounded Islands. Each project is unique. It can not be repeated." arrangements.
